

Andrew Moelis is a principal at Camber Property Group, a NYC-based leader in affordable and mixed income housing development. Since inception in 2016, Camber has purchased or developed nearly 13,000 units of housing in five states, working with municipalities, housing agencies, investors, and residents to provide affordable, safe homes. Andrew's responsibilities at Camber encompass overall firm strategy and business plan execution, with a focus on acquisitions and development outside of the New York City metro area. As one of the leading developers of affordable housing in the country, Camber has partnered on several historic transactions, including the rehabilitation of Edenwald Houses, one of the largest public housing complexes in the country, and a billion dollar development project at Stevenson Square in the Bronx. In 2021, Andrew and Camber were honored as the New York Housing Conference's Developer of the Year, one of the industry's highest awards, and a major achievement for a company barely five years old. Prior to founding Camber, Andrew worked at L+M Development Partners, at Empire State Development Corporation, and as an analyst in Citigroup's Municipal Securities Division.

Andrew is a graduate of the University of Pennsylvania, with a BA in History. In addition to his work at Camber, Andrew has been a member of the Board of Trustees for the University of Pennsylvania's Museum of Archaeology and Anthropology since 2019 and remains actively involved in the philanthropic work of multiple organizations connected to the ancient Near East.
